PURPOSE: Ivy Tech Community College recognizes the benefits associated with student participation in student organizations. Co-curricular activities supplements students’ traditional education and assist in providing them with opportunities to further develop life skills.

ORGANIZATIONAL SCOPE OR AUDIENCE:
Students, student organization members, and student organization advisors

DEFINITIONS:
Student Organization: Student organizations at Ivy Tech Community College are student initiated and student directed. Student organizations exist for a variety of reasons and come in a variety of forms. The purpose of student organizations vary from student governance, professional and academic-discipline or departmental organizations, religiously affiliated organizations, special interest groups, recreational organizations, sports clubs, and academic honor societies. Student organizations provide students with experiences which complement the academic classroom experience. They accommodate varied interests, cultural differences, abilities, and needs of their members. Participation, particularly in a leadership role, provides opportunities for student growth and development. Students can practice critical thinking, leadership, communication, financial management, group dynamics, and organizational skills.

Advisor: Student organization advisors take on a combination of the roles including advisor, coach, and educator. As an advisor, this individual works to maintain the organization and delegate tasks to the officers and members. As coach, they share a vision for the organization and work to improve the effectiveness of the organization and assist officers and members in reaching their goals. As educator, the advisor offers consultation, and through discussion, will help students critically think through situations and support them as they come to conclusions. Ultimately, student organization advisors counsel on organizational decisions and help student organizations maintain consistency from year-to-year.

Constitution: A constitution contains fundamental principles which govern a student organization’s operation. It establishes the identity of the organization by stating the purpose and outlines the basic operating structure. It includes information that is central to the organization and allows members, and potential members, to have a better understanding of the organization. A constitution should be consistent year-to-year; however, it should be reviewed annually and amended as necessary. By-laws: By-laws incorporate sections that have information and requirements that may change year-to-year (e.g. Specific amounts for dues or meeting dates). Many organizations do not need by-laws; rather the information can be incorporated into the constitution itself. By-laws should be reviewed annually and amended as necessary.

POLICY:
A. Establishing a New Registered Student Organization. A group of Ivy Tech students may become a student organization upon formal registration with the Office of Student Life. Registration shall not imply College endorsement of the group goals and activities. Such registration is contingent upon the following conditions and receipt of the following documentation:
   a. Intent to Organize Application form
   b. Constitution. An outline of the basic information to be included in a constitution is available in the Student Life Office
   c. List of eligible officers including contact information
